From the Principal:

Now that parent-teacher conferences are complete you might be asking yourself, now what? After your child's conference, talk with him or her about the areas their teacher highlighted as successes and together make plans to address any concerns. Sometimes this looks like setting aside time for math fact practice, or choosing a specific location and time for independent reading at home. A great option is setting a goal or two that you and your child agree is SMART! Specific, Measurable, Attainable, Realistic, and Timely. This could also be a time for families to talk about responsibility routines and how to strengthen these both at school and home.
