From the Principals:

This week as I walked through the halls of our school I was struck by a theme that kept catching my attention. I noticed different ways that teachers are working to help students to have a growth mindset, and consider how they can take responsibility for their choices and actions. We are proud of how talented and adept our teachers are at delivering a rigorous academic curriculum to our students, but they also work hard to help teach students how to be successful as a person. Some of the things I noticed were signs reminding students that they can make a difference by being the reason someone smiles, or having them celebrate their efforts by wearing "brag tag" necklaces, and in art, teachers remind students to leave their mark on the world. It's exciting to be part of a learning community that values and nurtures the WHOLE child. ~Mrs. Borio
